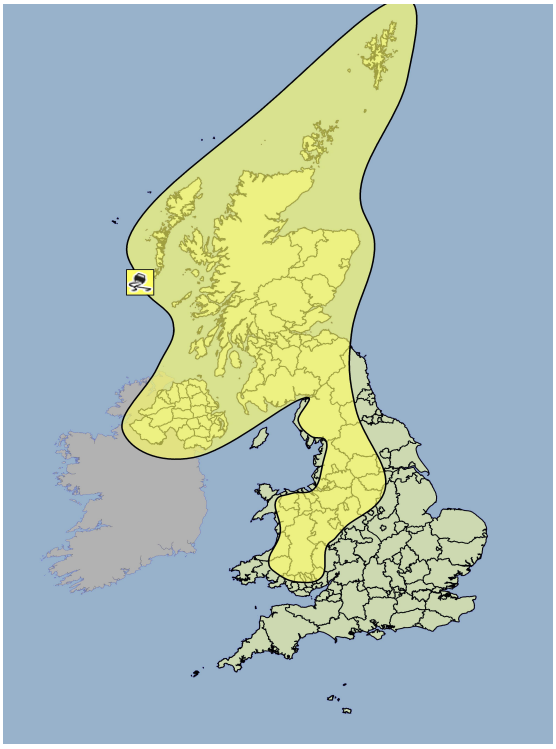
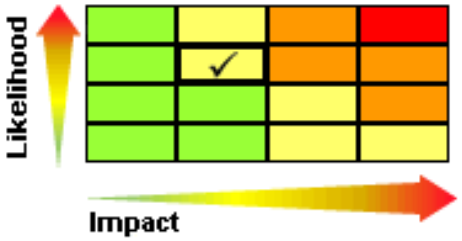
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A chilly northwesterly flow will cover the British Isles overnight and into Wednesday morning bringing a mixture of clear spells and wintry showers. Temperatures will vary with cloud cover, being coldest under clear skies between showers, when icy patches will form from time to time on untreated surfaces. In addition some snow accumulations are likely in places above 300 m, especially across Scotland, bringing an additional hazard to travel. The showers will tend to die away during Wednesday morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 18:00 on Tue, 02nd Feb 2016 until 10:00 on Wed, 03rd Feb 2016

Wintry showers will continue on and off overnight. Clear skies between areas of showers will allow ice to form at times on untreated surfaces. In addition over high ground, above about 300 m and especially across Scotland, some accumulations of snow are likely.

Please be aware of the potential for difficult driving conditions and some disruption.
